It is reported from Peking that ten large guns ordered from England by the Viceroy of Fukien province, China, have arrived at Fukien, and are shortly to be distributed among the forts on the coast of the province.

The Poochow Dockyard.
It is reported from Peking that the Chinese Government has proposed to close the Government Dockyard and Engine Works at Poochow, owing to considerable losses of revenue. It appears, however, that the French engineers in the service of the dockyard are strenuously opposed to this measure.

Plague Germs in the Salad.
Major Brown, of the Board of Health, Manila, expressed his opinion to a reporter of the Manila Times that the consumption of raw vegetables in the form of salads, etc., is largely responsible for the spread of bubonic plague, and says that too much care cannot be exercised in cleaning vegetables before eating raw, though even then this precaution is not sure. The Major states that his previous convictions are confirmed by recent reports of the plague in Australia, where it is confined solely to the whites, and as yet no natives have been affected. Reports show that its spread starts from districts where there are canals and streams, and the inference is that the germs are carried into the water with refuse, and as a great quantity of the fresh vegetables are usually washed in the canals they in turn carry the germs to the consumer. This state of things is identical in Manila, where the natives use the same canal for dumping their refuse, washing their panes and clothes, and cleaning their vegetables and other classes of market produce's. Major Brown thinks it absolutely necessary that all vegetables should be placed in boiling water for a minute or two before dressing if they are to be eaten raw, though if cooked it is much better to "cook" them, as he believes that plague germs are frequently killed by the steam through the cooking then contaminated food.
